NO MORE

The Evans kids were all ready to go to the pool.

“Summer is officially here! Chillin’ by the pool. Hanging out with friends. I love summer!” Kelsey proclaimed.

SCHOOL!

7

“Best of all, NO MORE SCHOOL!”
they shouted in unison.

Just as the kids were about to walk out the door, their mom
entered the room and said, “Sorry guys, summer isn’t here just yet. J2 still has a project to do.”

“NOOOOOO!”
they shouted.

Just then, J2 walked into the room.

“Did someone say my name?” he asked.

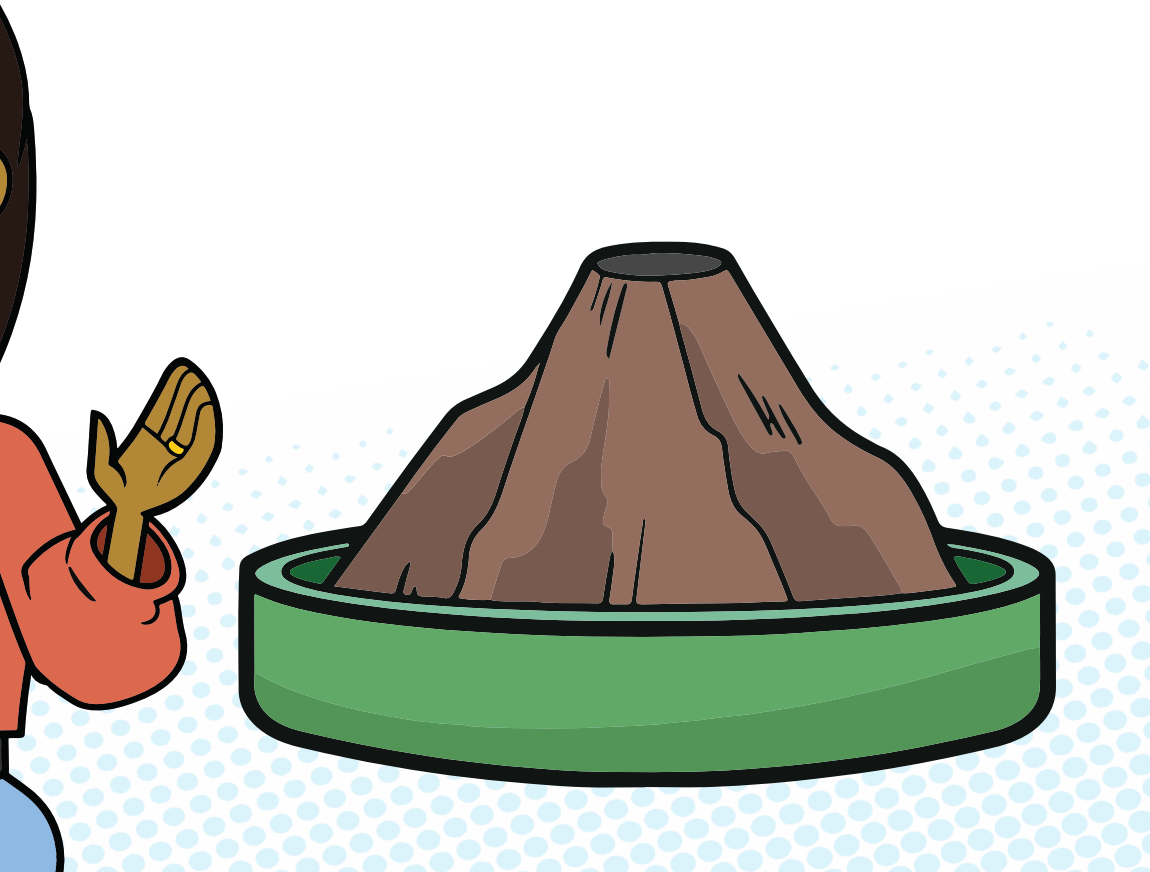

Mrs. Evans explained that he had a science experiment that he hadn’t completed because of a soccer game. His brother and sisters were unhappy with him, as they were ready for their summer break.

Everyone gathered around a paper-mache volcano.

“This is a timed science experiment. You have one minute to read and follow the instructions. Ready, set, go!” Mrs. Evans shouted.

J2 frantically picked up the paper instructions and began to read aloud, “Step one. Four tablespoons of baking soda.”

“In the pantry!” Kelsey shouted.

J2 quickly ran to the pantry and brought back a box.

“That’s baking powder, not baking soda!” Kelsey yelled.

“What’s the difference?” J2 asked.

Kelsey loved to talk about baking and perked up, “Well, baking soda will create a coarse, chewy cookie texture, while baking powder will give baked goods—”

“Not now, Kelsey!” shouted Kam.

J2 quickly ran back to the pantry and returned with baking soda. He put the four tablespoons in the volcano and picked up the instructions.

“Step two. One tablespoon of dish soap,” he read aloud.

J2 quickly returned with the dish soap from the kitchen and put the right amount into the volcano.

“Summer is so close, yet so far away,” whined Kam.

J2 read, “Step three. One cup of vinegar.”

“Fifteen seconds!” Mrs. Evans called out.

“Fifteen seconds! I can’t do it,” exclaimed J2.

“J2, just focus on the steps, not the clock,” coached Mrs. Evans.

A look of determination grew over J2’s face. He sprinted across the kitchen and returned in a flash. He measured out the cup of vinegar and poured it into the volcano.

“Five seconds!” Mrs. Evans warned.

The kids began to count down, “Four. Three. Two...”

FOUR, THREE, TWO...
